Review of Literature

1.1: INTRODUCTION

The review on related studies gives a clear view of the present study. Review of literature is an important aspect in any field of researcher. It gives the background information for the present study. The Review of related studies gives the direction, set the hypothesis and helps to locate the problem of the present study. The publications of journals, magazines of researchers are the source for the review of related studies. An analysis of review of literature enables the researcher to identify the research gaps in the previous studies. The present chapter inspects and critiques the studies directed by numerous researchers in the area of management of healthcare and community involvement in healthcare activities. This chapter reviews about issues of health care and to understand the healthcare point of view in terms of the public expenditure of health sector, implementation of healthcare services in India and in the state of Andhra Pradesh, and enhancement improvement in healthcare infrastructure, delivery services to the beneficiaries, group participation programmes and delivery of quality healthcare services in the sector of healthcare sector.

1.2. REVIEW OF LITERATURE ON HEALTH EXPENDITURE

Aggarwal, (1977)¹, concluded that in recent years there has been a growing concern about the widening gap between population growth and food supply in developing countries in view of speed population growth. Available food supplies were inadequate in nutritive quantity for a healthy and active life. Retarded development and poor health were responsible for low stamina and less physical activity. Less physical activity resulted in low productivity, which in turn caused huge poverty and more inadequate food supply. Unless this vicious circle is broken, next generations will have reduced stature, lower body weights, and lower level of physical capacity and consequently reduced working capacity.

Sharma, (1978)², study has been attempted to find out the gaps between the available manpower and manpower needed to provide sufficient medical care to the beneficiaries. This Study found out that the gap between available manpower and actual requirement varied from one to seven medical officers in the sampled dispensaries. The norm derived for medical officer on the basis of the second approach was estimated to be 6 medical officers for 10,000 beneficiaries.

World Health Organization (WHO) (1981)³, showed that nearly 1000 million people were trapped in vicious circle of poverty, malnutrition, disease and despair that saps their energy and reduced their work strength. It was explained that most deaths in many developing countries
